Comparative Perspectives Symposium: Bioprospecting/Biopiracy

An Ecofeminist Perspective on Biopiracy in Latin America

Ana Isla
Centre for Women’s Studies and Department of Sociology
Brick University

Comparative Perspectives Symposium: Bioprospecting/Biopiracy

An Ecofeminist Perspective on Biopiracy in Latin America

This essay develops an ecofeminist science analysis of biopiracy in Latin America. This perspective understands the current transplant scientific agenda as a continuation of a long history of capitalist, patriarchal, and racist colonization of women, peasants, indigenous peoples, land, and nature. So much of the accumulated capital was extracted from these groups that a great deal of what comes as economic growth has been and continues today to be simply the transfer of local and communal wealth into external markets. Their subsistence production is both necessary to capital and necessary to their own survival and is taken through capitalist patriarchal violence.

Ecofeminists Bembo-Thomsen and Maria Mies (1999) argue that women’s household labor, peasants, indigenous products, and nature’s gifts are made invisible by being naturalized. They also observe how colonial peasants and indigenous peoples are “housewives” (Bembo-Thomsen and Mies 1999, 16), treated as feminine workers—unpaid or poorly paid. Bembo-Thomsen and Mies have formulated their subsistence perspective as the precondition for: the survival and regeneration of life on the planet as a whole; self-determination within the limits of necessity; a new way of life in all its dimensions (economy, culture, society, politics, language, etc.), each without separation from the others; historical connection that exists, through colonization and development, between the industrial and nonindustrial worlds; security, freedom, autonomy, self-determination, and the preservation of the economic and ecological base as well as cultural and biological diversity for the victims of the war against subsistence and contrary to human nature and history (Bembo-Thomsen and Mies 1999, 19–20). The subsistence perspective also expresses the viewpoint of women and men engaged in a daily struggle to survive for themselves, their families, and their communities.

https://doi.org/10.1086/508378

ARTICLE CITATION

https://doi.org/10.1086/508378

MOST READ

Of all published articles, the following were the most read within the past 12 months

The Complexity of Intersectionality
Michael McCall

Toward a Field of Intersectionality Studies: Theory, Applications, and Practice
Cho J. A.

"I Get Paid to Have Orgasms"—Adult Webcam Models’ Negotiation of Pleasure and Danger
Pamela S. Jones

Worrying about Vaginas: Feminism and Eve Ensler’s The Vagina Monologues
Laura Cooper

What Is Third-Wave Feminism? A New Directions Essay
Karen J. Snyder

YOUR ACCESS OPTIONS

Personal Access
If you have access to this journal as a benefit of membership in the sponsoring organization, log in through the member link in the right column.

If you have an individual subscription, or if you have purchased this article separately, click on the link below.

Purchase

Purchase this article: $10.00

Purchase now

Other options
If your institution has an electronic subscription to this journal, please log in to your institution’s library website or contact your librarian for journal access. Some institutions may provide Single Sign-On access here.

Recommend this journal to your librarian for subscription.

Subscribe to this journal by choosing Subscribe/ Renew, at the top left of this page, below the journal cover.